THINKING OUT LOUD

By H. M. L.

The president has spoken again, this time before the United Nations delegates. This time his voice was not a fresh breeze right off the Kansas prarie. In fact it was a good talk in line with American majority sentiment and conviction as regards foreign policy, but we think it was a composite of what the best minds advising the president could devise in the way of allaying world fears of another war.

We note in the news that Molotov spokesman for Stalin, and for Stalin only, warmly commended Mr. Truman on his address for peace. We think Molotov is entirely guided by the desires of Stalin in matters of arranging the post war world. We donbt if the Russian workers have many ideas about Russian foreign affairs, and know of a certainty they could not express them, if they did.

As a diplomat we think Molotov did the right thing. It is polite of the foreign minister of Russia, to find that the president of the United States has voiced the strong hope for peace that prevails in the world, and in that respect parallels the recent utterances of Stalin. We confess however, we shall be more convinced that the president's talk is effective, when Molotov places the Russian foreign policy on a multilateral rather than a unilateral basis. We have to bear in mind that Molotov is the voice of Stalin. He is a servant, serving a hard master, a master who came to the top by suppressing all opposition in much the same way as Hitler suppressed opposition. He converted a minority into majority by the murder route, for Russian and German purges have exactly the same character.

We are willing to admit quite freely that the Russian worker is better off today than he was thirty years ago. His new masters are concerned more with accumulating power. His old masters under the czarist regime were mainly concerned, as we read the Russian novels, with accumulating pelf. They lived luxuriantly and happily over a smoldering volcano that blew its top. We can well understand that a people sometimes reduced to suckling their babies at the teats of the master's farrowing pigs, feel greatly uplifted under a government which sees to it that they are given shelter, clothes and food in return for their work. The success and the durable qualities of the Russian armies in the late war was not an accident. They were properly trained, clothed, fed and led—vital matters that the czars neglected.

We have to remember when we deal with the Russians that we are dealing with a two per cent minority of a population, the communists, and reducing the percentage still lower, we come to the political bureau which consists of nine men, and those nine, owing their place of power to Stalin, doubtless never oppose him. So we came to the conclusion that we deal with Stalin alone. One man with absolute power and intelligence, sinister or otherwise can be a much better diplomat than a nation of 150 millions. The Russians were pleased with Henry Wallace talk in Madison Square arden, because first it suited their purposes, and second because it again revealed the world the weakness of a democracy, in which every citizen has a say-so in government policy.

We think the Russians will continue to applaud Henry Wallace. He has come to California, to rescue, if he can at this late hour, the CIO-PAC candidates for congress who would probably cause great rejoicing in Moscow, if elected. It is almost a certainty that Stalin's idea of a peaceful world springs from the kind of peace he has established in Russia. Henry Wallace, like Chamberlain, late prime minister of Great Britain believes in appeasement, though he doesn't call it by that name. As an American he probably pushes the thought of war away over the horizon and hopes prayerfully that something will happen to avert war, and probably thinks Pearl Harbor cannot happen twice. A great many Americans are like that. It is the result of having lived nationally for much more than a century without foreign invasions, and winning all the wars we were reluctantly pushed into.

But the Henry Wallace philosophy, we firmly believe, is now to be discarded, if we are really to survive. We must be prepared for the worst if we do not win, as Russia is trying to win, by diplomatic means. We regard Stalin as a dictator, more benevolently disposed toward his countrymen at least, than the late Hitler, but nevertheless just as dangerous to the world peace. We have seen the failure of the Wallace philosophy in world affairs. This is a cruel world for Pollyannas.

SIDNEY WARNER STILL MISSING SEARCH GOES ON

Paul Norboe, Christmas tree contractor with headquarters at Soda Springs on Highway 40, stated last evening that no trace had yet been found of Sidney Warner, a member of his cutting crew who disappeared Tuesday morning.

GOV. SURPLUS SALES CENTER IN SACRAMENTO

Government surplus merchandise, no matter where it is located, can now be bought through a centralized service in this area at the field disposal office which War Assets Administration has just established in Sacramento's Chamber of Commerce building, 917 Seventh Street.

The new way of disposing surplus, War Assets Administration believes, will not only be a convenience to buyers whether veteran, other priority or commercial purchasers—since they not only can buy surplus available without visiting many sales sites, but they can buy directly in a single visit to the Sacramento office, from any site.

Complete sets of catalogs of regional and site sales are maintained at the office and a sales force on hand assists prospective buyers in locating what they want. It is expected to be particularly helpful for those who wish to follow the many bid sales which are now taking place continually at WAA seven Northern California sites. Facilities are available at the office for those who wish to arrange credit.

Displays of representative items of surplus as well as photographs of larger items are now being arranged at the Sacramento office, WAA officials said.

The Sacramento office continues to certify World War II veterans for priority purchases, a service it has been giving since last May.

CRITICAL FIRE SEASON OVER SAYS ELLIS

Forest Supervisor Guerdon Ellis of the Tahoe national forest officialiy announces the end of the critical season on the forest.

Recent rains have reduced the fire danger to such an extent that the fire closures and restrictions invoked earlier in the year on national forest lands are now lifted.

Those restrictions which were imposed under Federal Regulation T-1 and which are now recinded are paragraphs:

(e) Requiring campfire permits before building campfires on the national forest.

(h) Prohibiting smoking except at designated places.

(m) Prohibiting the throwing of any ignited substance where it might start a fire and the discharge of fireworks.

(o) Prohibiting possession and use of tracer or indendiary bullets on national forest lands.

Supervisor Ellis cautions that the specific acts listed in the federal closures now rescinded applies only to government owned lands within the Tahoe national forest and no way affects the California state fire laws which rmain in force until December 1 and apply to all state owned and private lands in this area.

Permits are still required under state law to burn debris and logging slash and such permits must be secured from State Division of Forestry or forest officials having jurisdiction.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY FINDS MUSEUM HOME

Elmer Stevens, president of the Nevada County Historical Society, announced at a dinner given in Wesley Hall in Grass Valley in honor of Professor S. G. Morley, guest speaker that headquarters had been granted the society for a museum in a large room on the highway just outside Nevada City in a motel.

The offer of Mr. and Mrs. Byron Brock, motel owners, to house documents and historical items pertaining to Nevada County, Stevens said had been accepted. He reported that the Nevada City Council has donated the old fire house on Commercial Street, no longer in use, as a place for housing the larger museum pieces that cannot be accommodated in the motel quarters.

Professor Morley, member of the University of California department of romance languages, spoke on Place Names in Nevada County. He revealed that the nomenclature of rivers in this region, as the north, south and middle forks of such streams as the Yuba, American and Feather Rivers, was peculiar to California. In no other part of the country, he said does one hear of the north fork of the south fork of the middle fork of such a river. In other localities each stream is named to the point of its confluence with a lrager stream.

Morley said that there were no Spanish names places in Nevada County. North San Juan, he said, owed its name to an American veteran of the Mexican war, who fancied he saw a resemblance to a place he had visited in Mexico.

H. J. Nile was appointed chairman of a committee make a county survey for landmarks of historic spots which are now unmarked, in order to secure for Nevada County its proper representation of the Great Historical Map of California, now being compiled as a guide and aid in the Centennial Celebration.

SHOULD MARRIED WOMEN VOTE?

All seriousness aside, don't you think married women should be denied the vote? Every election they march to the polls by millions and cancel out their husbands votes. They cast ballots opposite to what their lords and masters have told them.

Actually, they'd just as soon vote like hubby, but they're slaves to the habit of getting in the last word. So when they enter the vote-casting booth they can't resist a secret victory over the male.

As a result hunreds of thousands of bucks are wasted in election expense.

Worse than that, the country is run by unmarried people.

Don't you see where this may lead? When single folks catch on to the fact that the reins of power are in their hands, they will soon put through special legislation favoring the unhitched.

Laws will be passed specifying that president, senate, house of representatives and cabinet officers must all be qualified bachelors or old maids. Lord knows where it will all end.

The way to stop this is to deny married women the vote. Herewith: a skit to illustrate our point.

Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Voter are sitting at breakfast reading the San Francisco Chronicle(you heard me). Mr. Voter looks up from the paper.

"By the way, honey," he says, "be sure to vote for Mr. Basil Bluff for Senator. His opponent, Humbert Hotwind, is a crook."

"Why should I?" inquires Velma Voter, sweetly.

Vernon scratches his head.

"Well," he responds, "he's trustworthy, loyal, helpful, kind, cheerful, obedient, thrifty, brave, clean and reverent. What more could you want in a public servant?"

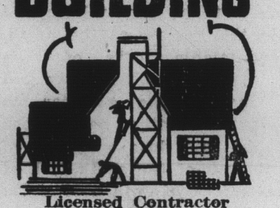

"But what's the matter with Hotwind? He takes a wonderful picture."

"He's just no good," growls Vernon, "Never done a day's work in his life. Inherited millions. And he's a notorious ladies' man.

That cinches it.

Mrs. Voter smiles sweetly, devotes her attention to the Society Page, meanwhile making a mental picture of herself, wearing that new blue polka dot dress, entering the polling booth, seizing the small rubber stamp and impressing the "X" opposite the name of—you guessed it—Humbert Hotwind gains another vote. THE GREEN YEARS ON BROADWAY SCREEN

Playing tonight and tomorrow on the Broadway screen is The Green Years, from a best seller novel of that name by A. J. Cronin. The background of the tensely moving story is a small town in Scotland with some of the most unusual characters ever depicted in fiction or drama.

One of the most robust and roistering parts, is that of Grandpa Gow, an octogenarian with a lusty love of living and doing, played by Charles Coburn.

It is Grandpa Gow who befriends an orphan coming to his grandparents in the village and encourages the lad to apply for a medical school scholarship against the wishes of other members of the family. The old man is a colorful figure who propels the action throughout the story, until its exciting denounment.

Gorgeous Autumn Colors In Yuba Canyon

DOWNIEVILLE, Oct. 28—These are the golden days of fall in the North Fork of the Yuba River Canyon on the Downieville district of the Tahoe national forest, according to District Ranger Frank B. Delaney.

The mountains and canyons along the Yuba River State Highway No. 49, near the old mining towns of Downieville and Sierra City and east up through the beautiful Sierra Buttes recreational area, across the Yuba Summit Pass to Sierra Valley, are clothed in a riot of glorious autumn color—brilliant yellows, reds and gold.

Delaney suggests to the friends of the forest to the color movie and camera fan, a week end motor trip up through the Yuba River Canyon over the Yuba Pass to Sierra Valley, then east to Truckee and back over Highway 40 to see this incomparable fall color. See the brilliant red of the dogwoods, the subtle beauty of the canyon maples and oaks, the aspens shining gold against the dark firs and pines.

HUGE LOGS AT HILLS FLAT

The Hills Flat Lumber Company yesterday announced that the largest logs in the history of the sawmill are ready to pass through the saws.

Some of the logs, eight feet in diameter, were felled at Fuller Lake. They are from ponderosa pine trees.

SWEATER GIRL

"Nothing ever happens in Nevada City." Sweater Girl sighed, chewed her gum and sipped her coke. The four other students in the ice cream parlor booth made no answer. There wasn't any. Sweater Girl had stated it. But you knew something was going on just to look at her. The Sweater told you. This was the real article. On her small figure it was The Biggest Sweater in the World. Purple, with a bold "N. C." upon it. The shoulder seams were almost to her elbows; it hung around her like a robe. Yet she wore it proudly. Her knight had won it on the high school courts or gridiron, had tossed it to her, shyly, as a symbol.

Sweater Girl finished her coke, arose with her companions and departed, saying: "I wish there was something to do."

You said it, Sweater Girl, what to do? You need an answer to that question. You and all our high school boys and girls. True, the churches and the schools offer recreation of a kind; but you need some place where you can gather not as pupils, nor as Protestants, Catholics or Jews, but solely as young men and women. You need a break in the future plans for Nevada City.

To use your jargon, we're hep in Nevada City. We beat our gums about such things as tourist trade and sewers, chloride and new business; we scream about airstrips, highways, the return of gold. All these are necessary, and we'll get them, but we can't forget you in the process.

You're a good gal, Sweater Girl; though you may look silly in that sweater. One thing we're sure of, you're not delinquent. Sure, you're a worry to your parents, but then, parents were made in part for worrying about you. You're okay. You are, to quote the platform orator, the best investment this town will ever have to offer. And the question that we ask is this: What is Nevada City doing to provide suitable recreation for its teen-age youngsters?

THE OUTSIDERS

A large sedan with "Oakland" on its license frames double-parked before a local store. A minx in mink (or was it rabbit?) alighted swiftly and started across Broad. She'd reached the center when a loud voice called to her from within the car: "Watch out for the streecars." She stopped, turned, laughed and shook her curls in acknowledgment of this private joke, then made a pretty business of dodging imagineary traffic until she reached the curb.

An elder native of our city who had paused to admire the large sedan, the nylons, or the mink (perhaps he'd raised rabbits as a lad), muttered: "That's the trouble with this town. Too many outsiders."

Come now, old timer, take it easy" Let them laugh at our narrow, crooked streets, our ancient canopies and iron doors. This is their first trip. They've just begun to live. They'll be back. Let them look. Let them stare. Let them go home and ell their friends about those "darling little twin cities in the Sierra". Let them come back next year and the next. Then, when they start making inquiries about homes and acreage for sale, when they're moved in and are raising rabbits on their own, that's the time to tell them streetcars are old stuff up here.

And in the twilight of their days, when they proudly tell all strangers that the best years of their lives were spent right here, perhaps the minx—a mellow minx at this point—will say loudly to a neighbor as a strange heliocopter hovers over Broad Street; "Haven't seen that one before. What's happening to Nevada City? Sure a lot of outsiders here."

PLEADS NOT GUILTY

Curtis Vinum pled not guilty Thursday morning when he appeared before City Judge Miles D. Coughlin to charges of disturbing the peace. The defendant was arrested Wednesday night by Policeman Otis Hardt.
